

Research Poster Competition 2022

for excellence in the contribution of research to Equality, Diversity and Inclusion during 2021/2022

About the Competition

ARC KSS would like to recognise and celebrate the contributions made by applied health and social care researchers during the last 12-18 months with examples of excellence in the contribution of research to Equality, Diversity and Inclusion, including:-

- research with under-represented groups and communities
- project/s that demonstrate excellence in EDI through participation, involvement, co-production and/or engagement

Submitted posters should include aims, objectives, what they have achieved so far, what they have learned and what has excited them.

The winner and two runner-up prize winners will be invited to present their poster at the ARC KSS Research Week Symposium taking place on Thursday 23 June 2022 at the University of Sussex.

The winner will receive a £150 training bursary and two runner-up prizes a £100 training bursary. Travel will also be funded to attend the symposium on 23 June.

The competition will be judged by a panel drawn from ARC KSS's Organisation and Research Capacity Group (ORCA), Developing Research Careers Group and Public Advisors. All posters submitted will be available to view on the ARC KSS website and displayed at the ARC KSS Research Week Symposium.
